THE EXPOSITION.

There was quite a respectable gathering of people at the Exposition this morning at the very opening of the doors. The crowd was on the increase through the entire forevoon. The larger portion of those present were constantly to be seen in Horticultural Hall, examining the beautiful display of bouquets that still remain on the tables. This display of flowers, after what we have seen on the same tables only a few days back, would not strike one as being anything so fine after all that has been said, but upon close inspection, especially of some of the more delicate flowers, it must be acknowledged that it is one of the very best displays of the season. Mr. Sunderbruch, Mr. Critchell and Mr. Knott were again at the front in the way of premi-that shows a study of atmosphere of sunlights and of shadow. As a picture of still life it is very fine; but the minor points bave been dwelt upon to the damage of the more important ones. It is a pity that this great artist—for he certainly was great—could not have been represented by something more pretentious, not in point of size, but in idea. A man honored by Messionier and Gerome, the companion of Gibert, Madrazo and Zamacois, could not have been other than a master. He could not have lived and painted surrounded by such men and not have been detected; and, when we read of his celebrated been other than a master. He could not have lived and painted surrounded by such men and not have been detected; and, when we read of his celebrated painting, "The Marriage in the Sacristy of a Spanish Church," and his beautiful "Aquarelies," we can not but regret that his genius is not illustrated by some greater work. Fortuny, as may be seen by a close study of this work, was delighted in painting the play of light and the intricacies of shadow. Indeed, it is related of him, that, while traveling over the battle fields of Morocco, he neglected the grand dramatic sceees of war to sketch the more trivial thinge—the sheen on the armors and the like.

Next we come to "The Roman Interior." One would scarcely believe, while gazing upon this singular picture, dating back to the time of Augustus Cæsar, that the artist was a Dutcuman. Yet it is nevertheless true that Alma Tadema was born in the village of Dronryp, in Friesland. His course has been a very singular one, having aboured a love for the classics by early bronryp, in Friesiana. His course has been a very singular one, having abquired a love for the classics by early study, he being intended not for an artist, but one of the learned profession. He has painted but one picture that does not partake of the nature of the one here exhibited, all, with the single exception of the one mentioned, dating back over one thousand years. This work, though a little heavy in color, exhibits all the peculiarities of the man, showing by the care with which the details and techniques are brought out, and the color of the contunenances and all, the rigidity of his early training.

Such a picture as this "Reman Interior" is doubly valuable as a gratification to the lover of painting and the student of antiquity. For years the work of this, one of the greatest of modern Dutch, painted not of the Butch school, however, fon Tadema belongs to no school, husg upon the wall of the galleries, unnoticed because this antiquated atyle was an innovation that waited for the classical mind to discover and proclaim its merits. But this careful portraysi of the architecture, interior decorations and the like, has not interfered with the story of the picture. It is as beautifully told, by the similing countenance of the babe, the quiet content of the mother and the almost audible chuckle of the old crone at his feet, as though Tadema had no hobby. This picture is one of the greatest acquisitions to the Gallery of this year, and affording us the most singular of modern artists.
